Amyr Klink said that he was going to cross the Atlantic Ocean by himself in a rowboat. Nobody believed him and some people thought he was crazy.

"I didn't plan this by myself,"Klink said. "I had some help from scientists and engineers."

On June 10, 1984, Klink left Namibia in his rowboat, The Paraty, and headed for Brazil.

It was not an easy experience for Klink. He rowed his small boat across the Atlantic for 92 days. His only companions were dolphins, whales, and a few sharks who amused themselves by chasing after the boat.

One day, he almost hurt himself while he was cleaning the boat. He slipped and fell into the water. Fortunately, there were no sharks around that day.

His daily routine was very hard. He woke up around 5:30, had breakfast, and then rowed for about five hours. He stopped for lunch and rowed for another four to five hours. He only slept for a few hours every night.

Finally, on September 9, 1984, The Paraty arrived in Salvador, Brazil. It was the end of the journey.

We all read for a variety of reasons. These reasons change with our age, and the literature we read. Our basic reason for reading is probably pleasure. We read literature mostly because we enjoy it.

Reading for pleasure may take various forms. We may read just to pass the time. Or we may want to escape from the four walls that usually surround us. Reading serves as a jet plane that speeds us away from ourselves into the words of other people.

We often read for information and knowledge. We find pleasure in learning about life in the Mississippi River. We find possible solutions to our problems when we meet people in books whose problems are like our own. Through literature, we sometimes understand situations we could not understand in real life.

No work of literature has wisdom or beauty in itself. The greatest poem ever written is only a printed sheet of paper until a reader reacts to it. To make writings literature, requires a reader. The reader helps create literature by responding to the writer's thoughts, emotions and beliefs.

Oil is now our most important fuel. But so much is being used that it could soon run out. This could happen in the next 50 years. Natural gas will not last for much longer. And in time coal will run out too. What will provide power when this happens?

An alternative energy is the power provided in nature. In the old days people tapped energy of flowing water with waterwheels. Today, engineers use water turbines. They direct the water through the turbines. The water spins the turbines, the turbines turn the generators, and the generators produce electricity. The electricity produced in this way is from great storage lakes, or reservoirs. The reservoirs are usually made by building dams across river valleys.

The power in the blowing wind is used in turbines. These are the modern version of the old wind mills which were used to grind grain into flour. Some of the latest wind turbines have propellers. The propellers, which are moved by the wind, spin the turbines. The turbines turn the generators, and the generators produce electricity.

The sun pours plenty of energy down on earth, and many homes now use this energy to heat water. It is difficult and expensive to trap solar energy on a large scale. But in some sunny parts of the world scientists have built experimental solar "power-towers" to do this. Hundreds of mirrors reflect sunlight into a boiler on top of a tower. This heats up water in the boiler into steam, which can then be used to turn generators.

Many countries now have nuclear power stations. These use a rare metal called uranium as a kind of fuel. Under certain conditions, the nucleus (centre) of uranium atoms can be made to split. This is called fission. When this happens, fantastic of energy is given out. The heat produced in a nuclear reactor is taken away to a boiler to boil water to produce steam. The hot steam powers electric generators to produce electricity.

One of the main drawbacks with a nuclear power station is that it produces dangerous waste. It is dangerous because it gives out radiation that can harm living things. Nuclear engineer have to make very sure that none of the radiation escapes, either from the reactor where fissions take place or the waste.

12. .... is used to produce nuclear power.

    c. Uranium

Trappists are monks who are not allowed to preach or to teach. Their lives are devoted to meditation, studying and reading.

In 1949, one group of Trappists fled to Hong Kong from China, leaving behind their houses and their dairy industry. They dressed themselves as labourers and carried only a few possessions.

Here, the monks had to start a new life. They found it difficult to obtain food and they had nowhere to live; but somehow they managed with the help of the community and charitable organizations. It was not until 1995 that the Hong Kong government granted them land on Lantao island.

The monks are not allowed to beg for a living, so they had to work very hard on the island. They started a dairy farm, kept about five hundred chickens and started growing their own vegetables.

A large part of the work of the Trappists is concerned with their dairy. The cows are fed regularly, milked and kept healthy. The dairy, which produces about two thousand bottles of milk a day, brings the monks their main income. The monks sell about half of the milk to a large hotel in Hong Kong, while hospitals and schools buy the rest. The monks also earn some money by selling eggs. Sometimes, the Trappists sell some of their cattle. The monks themselves do not eat meat, however, as they are vegetarians.
