The world's largest zone is the rim of the Pacific Ocean. It is here that 81 percent of the world's largest earthquakes occur. The belt extends from Chile northward along the western coast of south America, Central America, Mexico, and the United – States and the southern part of Alaska then through the Alcution Islands to Japan, the Philippines Islands, New Guinea, the island groups of the southwest Pacific and to New Zealand. This area is ripe for earthquakes because of the elevation changes in the mountains, the highest part of the earth's crust, and in the ocean trenches - the lowest part of the crust.

The second zone is the Alpide. This belt extends from Java to Sumatra in Indonesia through the Himalayas on the Mediteranean and out into the Atlantic. This belt accounts for about 17 percent of the world's largest earthquakes. The third belt follows the submerged mid – Atlantic ridge.

The earth is not a static planet. The large slabs of the earth's crust (tectonic plates) are in continual slow motion. An earthquake occurs when these plates move. The movement causes rock to be squeezed, bent, and stretched. This tremendous pressure eventually forces the rock to break, and the plates lurch into a new position. The underground place where the rock moves or breaks is called the focus. The epicenter is the area directly above the focus on the earth's surface. These movements cause large fractures, or faults, in the earth's crust, and along these fault lines most earthquakes occur. The adjustments that follow a major earthquake which often generate smaller quakes are called aftershocks. Aftershocks or tremors are usually much weaker than the main series of quakes and can follow for months while the area resettles.

Earthquakes can strike anywhere in the world, but through the years they have principally occured in three large zones of the earth.

By means of the telephone, you can talk to a friend who may be living far from you. Your message travels along a wire called a telegraph wire. There are also thick bundles of wire, called cables, placed at the bottom of the sea. You can send messages through them to another country.

Marconi, an Italian, was very interested in the telegraph when he was only a boy. One day, he had a brilliant idea. He thought that he could send messages from one place to another without using wires. And he succeeded! He invented the first wireless set in 1895. It is called 'wireless' because there is no wire joining the transmitter (the machine that sends the message) and the receiver (the machine that receives the message). The transmitter turns the sound of the speaker's voice into waves and sends these out through the air. The wireless waves cannot be seen, but they are received by the wireless receiver.

Wireless sets are most useful to ships and aeroplanes. The sets can send out and receive messages from land or from aeroplanes or other ships. Soldiers and policemen use very small wireless sets called 'walkie-talkies'.

When wireless waves hit something made of metal, they bounce back and are received by a special receiver. During a fog at sea, one ship cannot see another. However, wireless waves that bounce back show sailors that other ships are around and the ships will take care not to bump into each other. This special type of wireless is known as 'radar'. It can 'see' in the fog and in the dark.

In their famous Indonesian – English dictionary, Prof. Woyowasito and the late Mr. Purwodarminto translated the word 'arisan' as a saving club, while Prof. Dr. Bowman, a Dutch sociologist, defined it as "ROSCA", the abbreviation of Rotating Saving Credit Association.

Arisan plays an important role in Indonesian society. We can save our money and someday we can withdraw our saving. Or we can get a certain sum of money as a loan, and repay it in installments, without any interest. We may say that we can get credit without difficulty and formal procedures. The money intended for arisan is commonly regarded as a savings.

The purpose of arisan is to strengthen the bonds among participants. It shows the spirit of mutual assistance. Every member has the same chance to win the lucky number. He or she then will subsequently be the host or hostess for the next meeting.

Arisan is not only found among Indonesians. I believe that it is also popular in many other parts of the world. Of course it has different name. The number of arisan members is not limited.
